

Is Your Business A Good Place To Work?

Liiift's thoughts on recent research showing what employees think contributes to a good workplace

A "good workplace" makes everyone more productive. But what's the general consensus across the UK?

Recent research carried out by Ciphr* showed that 85% of respondents, from a poll of 1,006 employees, could list at least three advantages of working with their employer, with working alongside "friendly people" coming out as the number one factor contributing to a good workplace.

Other reasons to be positive about a workplace included having a supportive manager (chosen by 27% respondents) and job security (34% of respondents).

In a time where employers are facing challenges in terms of recruitment and retention, it's important to consider what can attract talent to an organisation. It's also a great time for employers to build on the reasons employees have given to make their workplace an even more positive place to be.

Being a good place to work benefits the whole team, boosting productivity, increasing job retention and attracting talent.

If you'd like to discuss how you can make your business a good place to work and become an employer of choice, then contact us today to arrange your free HR audit.

0151 268 0088
hello@liiift.co.uk
www.liiift.co.uk

* www.ciphr.com/what-makes-your-organisation-a-good-place-to-work/

Dawn Tolcher
Managing Director and Founder

